

Anna Włoszczak-Szubzda

Anna Włoszczak-Szubzda has a master's degree in Philosophy with teaching qualifications, obtained at the Faculty of Philosophy and Sociology, Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin, and the title of Mental Health Prevention Specialist obtained at the Faculty of Pedagogy and Psychology at this University.

Subsequently, she defended a doctoral thesis (PhD) at the Medical University in Lublin. She educates students in the following areas: mental health prevention, social and interpersonal communication, and prevention of addictions, also carries out vocational training courses for medical staff in communication skills.

As a researcher she is interested in the scope of problems concerning professional interpersonal and social communication in health sciences, with particular consideration of electronic media communication (Internet, TV, radio).

She is the author or co-author of 28 reports in scientific journals, 31 chapters in books, and the editor of 4 monographs (publications in a book form). She worked as a radio, television and press journalist, dealing, among other things, with health issues. At present, she occupies the position of a postdoctoral researcher at the Institute of Rural Health, Lublin, Poland; and Assistant Professor at the Faculty of Pedagogy and Psychology, University of Economy and Innovation, Lublin, Poland.